UNVEILING CEREMONIES YESTERDAY

Relatives of Those Honored Present

IMPRESSIVE SCENE

Sir Arthur, Dean Finley and Three Clergymen Unveiled Memorial Window

A short, but most impressive ceremony, marked the unveiling of the memorial window in the New Medical Building yesterday afternoon, before a large and distinguished gathering of professors and invited guests, who not only completely filled the corridor on the second floor, but also crowded the staircase in an attempt to witness the historic act which will long be remembered at McGill, not only because of the noble contribution to the beauty of the edifice, but of what is implied in the stained glass window, which, in three panels is a lasting memorial to three former McGill professors, who paid the supreme sacrifice during the late war.

The central part was dedicated to Lt.-Col. John McCrae, author of the immortal "In Flanders Fields," while the one on either side was erected in memory of Lt.-Col. H. B. Yates and Lt.-Col. R. P. Campbell.

The ceremony started at 12.30 o'clock, as Rev. Dr. E. I. Rexford, Dean of the Affiliated Theological Colleges of McGill, read the opening prayers, followed by a few appropriate remarks by Dr. F. G. Finley, Dean of the Medical Faculty, who briefly mentioned the sterling qualities of the three heroic men. Dr. Finley also read the inscriptions on the window, which gives an added charm to the corridor, with gothic shaped walls and ceiling.

In removing the flags which had screened the memorial, Sir Arthur Currie pronounced the words, in tones which resounded along the narrow hallway: "To the Glory of God and in memory of John McCrae, R. P. Campbell and H. B. Yates, old teachers of this medical school, who at the call of duty hesitated not to pass at once to the trials of bitter war, and there in the cause of humanity to render man's dearest possession, life itself."

Rev. Canon Almond dedicated the gift of the medical staff by saying:—"In the faith of Jesus Christ we dedicate these windows to the glory of God and in loving memory of his faithful servants, in the name of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Oh Heavenly Father, help us to trust our loved ones to Thy care, help us to look up to Thee remembering the crowd of witnesses by which we are surrounded, and grant that we on earth, rejoicing ever in Thy presence may share with them the rest and peace which Thy presence gives, through Jesus Christ Our Lord."

DEAN LAING WILL ADDRESS TEACHERS

Dr. MacMillan and Prof. Lochead Also Will Speak

The fifty-eighth annual convention of the Protestant Teachers of Quebec is now being held in this city, and it is hoped that McGill students will take advantage of the association's invitation to attend any of its meetings. To-day's programme, on which the names of some of the university's most eminent professors appear, promises to be particularly interesting. In the morning at 10.45, in the new Biological Buildings, there will be a meeting of the geographical section with J. G. Thompson, M.A., president of the Quebec branch of the Geographical Association, in the chair. At this time, Professor Lochead of McGill will speak on "The Glacial Period in Canada," and this will be followed by a period of discussion.

In the afternoon, the meeting will be held in the Assembly Hall of the High School and Dr. Cyrus MacMillan will give the address, his subject being: "English Literature in the School." In the evening, at 8.15, the teachers will again meet in the High School to hear an address on "The School and Society," by Dean G. J. Laing.

EMINENT MEN ASSISTED AT INAUGURATION

Biological Building Officially Opened Yesterday

NOTED SPEAKERS

Imposing Array of Distinguished Scientists Attended Ceremony

Addresses at the R.V.C. yesterday afternoon by Sir Charles Sherrington, distinguished Oxford physiologist, and Dr. Harvey Cushing of Harvard, marked the formal inauguration of the Biological Building.

On the platform, together with the two speakers and the Chairman, Principal Sir Arthur Currie, was an imposing array of distinguished men from the city and points all over the Dominion and the United States. The first four rows in the auditorium were occupied by the members of the staff, wearing their academic dress. The hall itself was filled to capacity with students and well wishers of McGill. This ceremony was preceded in the morning by addresses from Dr. John Coulter, of Chicago and Dr. H. Hamburger of the University of Groningen, Holland. These lectures, on technical subjects, were entitled, respectively: "The Botanical Perspective," and "A New Form of Correlation Between Organs."

Sir Arthur Currie, in extending a heartfelt welcome to the visitors from other universities, explained the circumstances which had made the present ceremony possible. He reminded his listeners that the construction of the Biological Building had been made possible by the gift of $1,000,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation, at the time of the Centennial Campaign. Of this sum $900,000 was to be expended on buildings, one of which was to be a Biological building. In carrying this condition out, Sir Arthur stated that nothing had been spared in making the building one worthy of McGill, and fully adequate to supply the needs of the departments which will use it.

In introducing the first speaker of the afternoon, Sir Charles Sherrington, the Chairman referred to the valuable service to the cause of science performed by him. Sir Charles, the Principal stated, is President of the Royal Society of Great Britain and Ireland, one of the highest honours which can be conferred in the British world of science. He is also one of the world's foremost physiologists, and at present lectures in that subject at University of Oxford.

Sir Charles Sherrington opened his address with reference to the importance of the occasion, educationally and academically. He pointed out that the acquisition of this building gave a home to five pre-medical subjects: Botany, Pharmacology, Zoology, Biochemistry, and Physiology.

He then proceeded to deal individually with the subjects in question, showing the value of each to medicine, paying particular tribute to the (Continued on page 4)

MONTREAL, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1922

A FRESHMAN RULE

The opening of the Intercollegiate Athletic Activities brings forward the perennial discussion of the eligibility rules concerning the men who are allowed to compete in the contests between the various universities and colleges of the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union. Several beneficial changes have been made during the past few years, especially that requiring a definite scholastic standing before an undergraduate would be eligible to play on his college team, but it is still widely felt that more stringent regulations would place college athletics on a still higher plane. The most frequently mentioned suggestion, and certainly the most important one, is the adoption of a rule barring freshmen from all of the teams representative of the universities in intercollegiate competition.

The plan is worthy of the deepest consideration by the C.I.A.U. and it is only fit that it should be taken up at the earliest possible moment. The main consideration to be put forward in favour of the proposed amendment to the rules is that the students who are entering the university for the first time do not properly grasp the relation of the athletic activities to their scholastic work and, as a result, there is far too great a proportion of failures in the first year. If the young men on first coming to a university were debarred from participating in any of the intercollegiate contests, they would be able to settle down to work and, by the time they reached their second year, their interest in the courses they were pursuing would prevent them from devoting their entire time to sport, to the detriment of their academic standing.

Another important factor has been added to the list of reasons in favor of the proposed rule, however. There has been a steadily increasing amount of rumour prevalent among the sport following public concerning the importation of experienced athletes to universities for the purpose of bolstering up teams that appear weak when their season of activity begins. Whether or not there is any foundation for the rumours is a matter that is of great interest to every person concerned in furthering intercollegiate athletics, and one that can be quite properly left in the hands of the Board of Reference of the C.I.A.U., but it is of importance that there should be no occasion for further recurrences of similar gossip.

A regulation preventing students from competing in athletics until they had reached the Sophomore year would stop all talk concerning the sudden arrival of well known athletes at the colleges, and would further serve as a bar to the ambitions of any overzealous enthusiasts who would contemplate doing anything of that nature. It is quite possible to imagine the case of an athlete coming to a university for a short period for the purpose of bolstering up a team, but for one to remain out of senior competition for a whole year, for the purpose of later playing as a regular, is not as likely.

There would be no question of preventing the first year men from participating in athletics, as sufficient competition could be arranged to give them the necessary exercise without allowing them to play with the representative aggregations. The system in vogue, among the American colleges, of having teams composed entirely of freshmen, is one plan for providing an outlet for the athletic ambitions of the first year students, while there are several other propositions worthy of consideration.

There is no doubt but that the adoption of the freshman rule would serve as hardship for the teams until they become more accustomed to the regulation, but it would at the same time do so much good to college athletics that the disadvantages would be overshadowed by the great benefit which would accrue. It is to be hoped that the question of the adoption of the rule will go beyond mere discussion and that some definite action will be taken by the ruling body in intercollegiate athletics at its next meeting.

FOUNDER'S DAY

Founder's Day closely follows the opening of the Biological Building, an epochal event in the history of McGill. The birthday of the Hon. James McGill, father of the university, has for many years been the occasion of the autumn convocation, and of an address by the Principal or a distinguished professor. During the past two sessions, the Principal's address has been delivered on the opening day, but this year it has been postponed until Founder's Day. Sir Charles Scott Sherrington will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, while nineteen students will be granted degrees in Philosophy, Arts, Medicine, Science, Commerce and Music.

The ceremony assumes a greater importance with the presence of Sir Charles Sherrington, President of the Royal Society of Great Britain and Ireland, who will deliver an address.

The significance of Founder's Day cannot be over-emphasised, and it is the duty of every student to endeavour to attend the ceremony in the Royal Victoria College. First year men and women are especially urged to witness the first convocation of their college careers. But for the generosity and foresight of James McGill, Canada's national university would not be in existence today. It is highly commendable that his grave at the head of the avenue, so long neglected, has at last been repaired.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This morning, at ten o'clock, our First Rugby Squad leaves Windsor Station for Toronto. We do not have to stress the importance of the game; we should not have to stress the labour that our team has undergone to make certain that the record of gridiron accomplishments that McGill holds will not be sullied. What we feel that we should emphasise is the duty each student owes to the university, and the obligation that each student is under to the team, to do his, or her, utmost to be at the station to give the players the send-off that they deserve, as the train starts them on their road to the Queen City and—who knows?—to the Intercollegiate

FRESHMEN'S RECEPTION ON TONIGHT

Strathcona Hall at Eight O'Clock

NO SOPHS

S.C.A.'s Party to McGill's Many Newcomers

This year marks many innovations in the "reception" of the first year men, not the least of which is the entertainment to be provided for them tonight at Strathcona Hall. In previous years smaller affairs used to be held for the Freshmen of each of the faculties separately; but on this occasion the men from the various departments meet together in a glorious meeting, where they can get acquainted with their classmates, and also count on seeing chaps from their home-towns, regardless of the courses they are pursuing. It may be explained to the uninitiated that this reception expresses the usual policy of the Student Christian Association in welcoming newcomers to the University, doing as much as possible to help wear off that strange feeling, and also to promote social activities for the student body throughout the term.

A formal programme is not planned. This will be a get-together affair, featured by songs, yells, cats and new stunts designed by the Committee to foster the spirit of comradery. The guests need fear no unwelcome attentions from the Sophomores on this evening, for it has been an unwritten law for years that hazing is off on the night of Freshmen receptions. So seek sanctuary at the Hall tonight at eight o'clock.

SWIMMING CLUB FIRST PRACTICE

Water Polo at Central "Y"

Yesterday afternoon at 5.30, the central "Y" tank was filled with men who intend trying for places on the water polo teams. There were several freshmen on hand who were put through the usual routine of a first practice. The material looks encouraging, but it is too early to judge how the men will turn out.

There are chances on the teams for anyone who can swim. The senior team has only two or three of last year's men eligible for position this year. This means the remaining places are open to last year's intermediates and the freshmen.

As is usual, McGill is placing a senior and intermediate team in the running this year.

The subject of having a junior team came up the other day. But it was decided that owing to the limited amount of time for which the tank is available, a junior team is at present not feasible. When McGill has her own gymnasium and swimming pool, then the club will build up as fine a junior team as she has had senior and intermediate teams in former years.

The swimming club will hold practices at the Central "Y" on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 5.30, and all Saturday afternoons. All newcomers will be welcomed.

The Daily is not responsible for the sentiments of letters published in the correspondence columns. Signed communications from graduates, undergraduates and members of the faculty will be placed in print if they are not of too great length.

Correspondents are requested to observe the unwritten law of the newspaper office—that they write upon ONE SIDE of the paper ONLY.

No communication will be admitted in this column without the name of the writer being attached, not necessarily for PUBLICATION.

To the Editor, McGill Daily:

Dear Sir:—Every year at this time comes the plea from students for new magazines and periodicals in the Union reading room. This year, or rather this session, again sees ancient (!) reading matter. I sincerely hope that now the Union House Committee will find time to replace the old magazines with the latest issues available.

AN ERROR

There is printed elsewhere a cut of Davey Ambridge, captain of this year's Rugby Squad. Due to a printer's error, this picture did not appear as intended yesterday morning, the picture of "Dink" Carroll being placed under the name of Ambridge. The "Daily" hopes thus to make amends to some extent for a regrettable mistake.

whether three years spent in Oxford will bring greater material success in life? If that is the question, it is hard to answer. I should hesitate to maintain that three years in Oxford in addition to a University course here will produce a return in dollars and cents, though on the other hand I think there is far to strong a tendency in this country to be unduly hurried about entering business or a profession, and that judged even by material tests, three years additional mental training and broadening may not be a bad thing and may enable the man who takes them to overtake and perhaps outstrip in the long run the man without the extra training.

The question may, however, have a wider scope. The questioner may measure his "worth while" by other less material standards. He may mean "worth while" as a means of intellectual development, of a broader outlook on politics and society.

If that is the question, then my answer is most decidedly "Yes!" "It is worth while," I would answer, because, to use the words of the late Sir George Parkin, it is worth while "to be in close touch with a centre and system of training which has for centuries produced, and to the present day has continued to produce many of the ablest statesmen, lawyers, publicists, theologians, historians, critics, writers in prose and verse, men of thought and men of action, of which the Anglo-Saxon race can boast"; because it is worth while "to widen his observation of life and manners by holiday visits to countries like France, Germany and Italy, which in art, science, literature and government represent so many of the highest achievements of mankind"; because it is worth while "to be brought into more or less intimate association with men selected like himself from every community where the English language is spoken outside of the British Islands, and with a large section of the elite of the youth of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales."

And there is another thing. Whatever may be our views as to the future of the Empire, no one surely can dispute that it is worth while to understand as far as possible the attitude and temper of mind of the people of England and Scotland, and how better can a man do this than by spending three years among them at such an impressionable period of his life.

There is no force in the objection sometimes raised that Canadians who go to Oxford will become less Canadian. Any one who takes the trouble to look into the facts will find that on the contrary, Canadians return to Canada with a greater belief than ever in their own country, although with a profound feeling of affection and admiration for the Island which still is the source of so much moral and intellectual inspiration for the whole world, particularly for the Anglo-Saxon part of it.

Finally, those Canadians who go to Oxford in a very real sense have the honour and responsibility of representing their own country in England, and of knowing that by them their country will be judged.

Here is an opportunity, here is an honour and a responsibility for the most alert, the most generous minded and the most public spirited of our undergraduates.

FIRST RUGGER PRACTICE ON OLD CAMPUS

About Twenty Turned Out Yesterday

COOPER, CAPTAIN

Practice Game On Saturday Against Second Montreal Squad

English Rugby enthusiasts held their first practice of the season yesterday afternoon on the old Campus, some twenty odd men being in uniform. The weather, no doubt, deterred a considerable number who would otherwise have turned out, but for a first practice the showing was quite satisfactory, although the numbers represented only a small proportion of the turnout the Committee are expecting when the season really gets under way.

Of last year's team, only two men are left, Wilson and Marpole. The former will probably hold down the position of centre forward this year, while Marpole is expected to be the mainstay of the threequarters line. Patterson, President of the Club, and square on last year's team, should help to strengthen the forward line, who, as far as can be judged from a first showing will be if anything a trifle lighter than last year.

Cooper, Captain-elect, will play half back with Mackintosh, in all probability. The remainder of the positions on the team will have to be filled by last year's spare men, and new material. Of this last, there should be plenty, in fact, among the dozen odd new men on the Campus yesterday the majority seemed to have a very fair knowledge of the game, and to be not at all unskilled in the finer points, such as quick and accurate passing and dribbling.

The majority of the time yesterday was spent in a light workout, the men being sent up and down the field passing the ball in an effort to get into condition, as well as to grow accustomed to the feel of the ball. All the candidates seemed to have fair skill at passing, and the better prospective three quarters and halfback aspirants were later sent to one end of the field to practice kicking and running, while the Captain took the remainder, and gave them half an hour's scrum drill and dribbling practice. A short time was also spent in teaching the forwards to bunch in from a line out, and take the ball at their feet.

Negotiations are under way whereby a practice game will be held on Saturday against the Montreal English Rugby Club's second squad. Another practice is being held today at three-thirty, and ALL men who are interested in Rugby are urged to turn out. It is manifestly impossible for the club to make a good showing if more men do not turn out, and the executive would like to see every one who has ever played the game at all. The manager, Budden, will be at the Molson's Hall to fix up any new men with equipment from three-fifteen on, in order that newcomers will have every chance, and since there are a considerable number of positions on the team that are by no means filled yet, there is a chance for everyone. Intending candidates are reminded that they must be physically examined before coming on the field. All Ruggerites are urged to turn out at 3.30 p.m. today.

ARTS-LAW RUGBY PRACTICE WAS HELD

Enthusiastic Turn-out To Organise Plans

An enthusiastic meeting was held yesterday in the Arts building in order to formulate rugby plans for the Arts-Law interfaculty team, and it was evidenced during the meeting that there is more interest taken in the rugby team than ever before.

Several former players, including Martin, are out again, as well as men formerly with the Intermediates, who have been out of rugby for several years and by their return will further strengthen the Arts-Law aggregation.

Today the first practice will be held and the captain elected and also to aid in purchasing supplies, a small contribution will be asked of all students in Arts-Law.

Every confidence was expressed by the numerous fans in attendance that Arts-Law would capture the inter-faculty championship this year.

Freshie—Did you ever hear a rabbit bark?

Senior—Nonsense, little one, rabbits don't bark.

Freshie—That's funny. It says here in my book that rabbits eat cabbage and bark.

FRESH-SOPH TRACK MEET ON SATURDAY

Physical Examinations Are Necessary

PLANS COMPLETED

Entries Must Be Filled In By Tonight

The plans for the Freshman-Sophomore meet have been completed. The officials have for the most part been selected, so that all that is needed now is a good turn-out of runners. There are up-to-date thirty second-year entries, and forty first-year entries. The blanks are still posted in the Union and at Molson Hall, but will be removed to-night. The second year is short of entries in several events, so that the Freshman will be able to gather in several uncontested points. There are no men on the list who have won a letter in this sport, so that although no records will be broken, the races will, in all probability be close. With this in view, the Freshman seem to have the better chance to break tradition and send the second year to defeat, for there is considerable lack of enthusiasm among the older class.

It should be remembered by all men who hope to enter any meet that they must have a physical examination before entering. Any infringement to this rule endangers the offender being barred from any college sport for the rest of the year. The men who ran last year on the track team should also see that their eligibility certificates are filled out, for the intercollegiate meet.

Manager Henry, of the Track Club, reports the plans for the coming track meet well under way. The interfaculty meet, which in all probability will be held on Friday the thirteenth, and the intercollegiate meets on the twentieth, require a long list of officials, which are rapidly being selected. The tickets for this meet will be put on sale within the next week or two.

Coach Van Wagner had several men on the track, despite the rain yesterday. Captain Hay was out, and made some fast times in the hundred, despite a sloppy track. Hamilton deserted the track for a tour on the mountain, and is now getting into shape for the longer distances. Egerton, another three-miler, was also out on the track. Bishop and Antcliffe took a trip on the harrier course, and covered it in fast time. Stephens, who is already in trim, managed to cover three miles at fast pace.

Both of the hammers are now in working order, so that the weight men can get out again today after yesterday's rest.

A ruling has been made which allows third year men in a five or six year course to run a sophomore's. On Saturday, all men not running in the meet should turn out at ten in the morning.

It is of interest to note that the University of Manitoba claims to have broken the half-mile relay record of Canada when Heffelfinger, Armstrong, Miller and Coaffee covered the four, two-twenty stretches in one minute and thirty seconds flat. The same team will go after the world's record on the fourteenth. This record is one twenty-seven.

The following officials have been selected for the Freshman-Sophomore Track team meet this Saturday:

Referee—R. L. Hamilton.
Judges of Track Events—Dave Johnson, chief; Dr. F. W. Harvey, Prof. A. J. McKillop, Prof. Deilley, C. Hoy, H. Crombie. Judges of Field Events—Mr. Lawrence, M. S. Antcliffe, W. R. Kennedy, O. L. McCullough, J. C. Antcliffe, M. Gaboury, N. Egerton, Roland E. Legg.

TRAINING ADVICE FROM TRACK COACH

It is quite impossible to lay down any system of training that would be suitable for all the events on the track programme, and no more is it possible to lay down a schedule of practice suited to all men training for a given event.

However, there are certain general rules which should be observed by all men in training for any of the events.

Practice should be the athlete's first consideration and it requires from three to six weeks, depending on the event and the individual, to get in condition for competition. It is, of course, important that the athlete should be in good general condition at the beginning of his season's training. Participation in other forms of sport between seasons is very desirable.

One very encouraging thing is that with each new season, though it will take several weeks to get into condition, one really begins where he left off the previous season, for form and experience once gained are not lost during the period of rest.

During track season one should practice daily with more than one trial in his event each week. He should finish each day's practice feeling that he could do more. The last two days before a Meet it is not advisable to do much practicing, rest is the important thing then.

At the beginning of each season many candidates complain of being short of breath. This is merely due to lack of condition and will disappear as condition improves. If intelligent practice is the most part of training, certainly rest and sleep are next. It is impossible to place too much emphasis on the importance of getting enough sleep and getting it regularly every night.

The important things about diet are to eat plain wholesome food in moderation; have meals as regular as possible and do not eat between meals. Avoid any foods that you know do not agree with you! Fancy deserts and pastry, as well as fried foods have no place on a training table. The last few meals before a Meet are the most important. The last meal before a race should be rather light and eaten three to four hours before competition.

Then any man who will practice regularly, get enough sleep and use good judgment in eating is on the right road to success, but he should remember that it may require from two to four seasons' faithful training to reach his very best. It is, therefore important for men to take up track work during their first year at college.

One might write several volumes on training for track and as soon as he had finished some one would be sure to cite the case of some famous athlete who broke all the known rules of training and yet made world's records. It is useless to deny that there have been a few such men, but how much better might they have been if they had trained?

In any case if you are not a Meredith or a Thorpe don't try their methods of training.

The 100 yard dash is the most popular of all track events and at one time or another most runners have tried it. The 220 yard dash is a close second in popularity and is usually run by the 100 yard man. Ability to sprint is of great value in races of all distances, and many races are won by the man who can sprint at the proper time.

It is not at all necessary that a man should conform to any particular type or build to be a successful sprinter, and it is absolutely impossible to pick a winner on first appearances. The one quality that is essential is nervous energy and without which one will never become a greatly great sprinter, though he may be an excellent distance runner.

The sprint might well be divided into three parts: The start, the stride, and finish.

The Start: After a few days or a week of slow jogging to get rid of all soreness, the runner should begin to practice starts. Each day when he comes out he should "warm up" well by running up and down the straightway a few times, then carefully dig his holes and try a couple of easy starts from his marks after which he should take from four to six starts going fifteen to twenty yards at top speed. We will not try to give a detailed description of the start here, that can better be done at the track. Starting practice is so important that even the best sprinters never cease to practice it.

The Stride will vary with the individual, but it must not be too long or too short. The knees are carried well up in front, and the toes must point straight down the track. The body is inclined slightly forward and the head is in line with the back with the eyes fixed on the tape. Never look at an opponent in a sprint race, and keep running whether in the lead or behind. The arms should be allowed to swing forward and backward, keeping the elbows close to the body.

The Finish.—The sprinter has been running at top speed, but when he comes to within ten yards of the finish, he must call upon all his reserve and concentrate on reaching the finish as soon as possible or better still, one yard beyond the finish to prevent stopping too soon and thereby losing in the last few inches.

There has always been a great deal of controversy about the best method of hitting the tape. Leaping makes a very spectacular finish, and this style seems to suit some runners, but it should not be practiced by all, for many men will actually lose time by it. Throwing up the hands and heaving the chest forward is the most common method of breasting the tape, and I know of no better for common use.

The 220 differs very little from the 100 except that one can use a longer stride to advantage.

All jumpers, weight throwers and distance runners should practice some sprinting.

The candidates for the Track Team are rapidly getting into condition, and with many of last year's team to count on, as well as several very promising new men we should have a well balanced team for the Intercollegiate Meet on October 20th.

While the Track Team has been successful in the past, the need of more new material, both to strengthen this year's team and for next year, cannot be too strongly emphasized. We are looking to the Freshmen and Sophomores particularly for our future Track champions.

Toronto will be here with a much stronger team than they have had for several years, and McGill will have to put forth her very best to retain the title.

Rev. Dr. Duncan, of the Church of St. Andrew and St. Paul, rehearsed some of the outstanding acts which the honored did while living. "Acts," he said, "which will ever live, although immortality has claimed them."

Standing to the left of the window, Dr. Duncan explained the meaning of the many signs in the glass. In the part dedicated to John McCrae, he pointed out the poppies, the crosses, and the other plainly visible objects in the wonderful handiwork.

Referring to the right-hand window, he continued: "There on the right is Boulogne, with its dome, its Napoleon, with his face ever averted from the conquest of Britain, the masts of whose navies speak of the mistress of the seas, the navy of which was soon to bear the stricken form of Col. Yates from the scene of his duties."

Immediately after, the dying notes of the Last Post had ceased to echo through the building, the professors withdrew to the Assembly Hall, where a buffet luncheon was served.

NEXT SUNDAY SEES S.C.A. AT ST. ANNES

Conference With Macdonald Students

"All aboard for Ste. Anne's" will be the word next Sunday! Again this year the combined student Christian Associations of McGill will unite with the students of Macdonald College in a whole day conference at Ste. Anne's for the purpose of setting up the programme for their work this session. The experiment last year proved such a success, both from the standpoint of numbers attending, and of interest and enthusiasm developed, that the suggestion to repeat this year has been most heartily received.

The party will leave the city by a 9.20 a.m. C.P.R. train, and will return by a train leaving Ste. Anne's at 8.56 p.m. Each person attending will carry lunch—enough for two meals—as it is not proposed to cause any trouble or inconvenience to anyone! There will be special cars, enough to hold all who care to come.

The programme for the day will include discussions on several matters of general interest growing out of the recent student conference at Muskoka, and others related to the work of the associations here. The students will have charge of the service in the Union Church at Ste. Anne's in the evening.

All who desire to attend should give their names to the office at Strathcona Hall. This is important, as it will facilitate the arrangements for tickets and for special accommodation on the trains. Further details may be announced later.

UNION CAFETERIA EXTENDS PREMISES

Additional Helpers Needed For Noon Hours

Owing to the very great patronage which the McGill Union cafeteria has been receiving since the opening of college, the Students' Council has found it necessary to open the additional room on the left of the main entrance for the accommodation of the students. For this purpose it will be necessary to find several new men to do the work of waiting on table and other work about the place. As they wish to offer every opportunity to the students to supplement their incomes they are offering the positions to any undergraduates who may apply and are asking to have any men desiring the work to call on the manager of the cafeteria this morning, if possible.

It is the intention of the executive of the student affairs to offer all positions possible to the men who wish to earn a little extra money and they are especially anxious to carry out this policy in connection with the cafeteria. The majority of the positions are only for work at the noon hour, and will allow the men time to get down after their morning lectures and get to work during the noon hour rush.

The patronage extended to the students' dining room has been most satisfactory so far but there has been a lack of room owing to the fact that the Football Club was using one of the available rooms. Now that the team has moved up to their new quarters on the stadium the room is available for the patrons at the meal hours, and there will be no more vain searches for space at the tables.

The number of men who have acquired the afternoon tea habit seems to have taken a noticeable jump in numbers during the past few days and the staff is kept quite busy in the later hours of the afternoon when the lectures are completed. The excellent pastry that has been served seems to be one of the attractions to the men who like a little refreshment and the room is beginning to have somewhat the same appearance as during the regular meal hours, when the seekers after the fragrant "oolong" gather for their afternoon discussions.

A few years ago the cafeteria was one of the greatest meeting places in the university for the students in the afternoon and some radical discussions were heard on practically every subject that was of public interest at the time. It would appear that the miniature forum would be about to resume its former place in the life of the undergraduates.

ORGANIZATION MEETING

Yea, Fresh
Yea, Men
Yea, Yea,
Freshmen!

The organization meeting of Arts '26, held in 250 Biological Building, proved that this year's Freshies intend to uphold the honour of their class, and do not intend to submit to the insults and attempted injuries heaped on them by the Sophomores. The snap and business-like precision with which the meeting was carried out soon satisfied the one or two stray sophs, who, notwithstanding the very obvious sign on the door, NO DOGS ALLOWED, managed to sneak in, that Arts '26 means it. Following a brief organization talk, during which it was moved and carried that this year's officers be elected for a period of three weeks' probation, election of officers took place. Mr. H. P. Teakle, a well-known West Hill man, is president, and we are sure that it will not be long before everyone will speak with justified pride of President Teakle. Frank Godine, vice-president, received his preliminary instruction at Montreal High School, where he served in the capacity of senior prefect for two years. Mr. G. Gorrie, the treasurer, is a well known man in west-end school circles, where he held many positions of importance. The secretaryship could not be vested in a better person than that of Mr. Doushkes, who last year was president of the Scientific Society of the High School of Montreal. The class scribe is T. H. Harris, who served last year as one of the literary editors of the Montreal High Annual Magazine. Look out sophs; there ain't no flies on Arts '26.

COLLEGES AS COUNTRY CLUBS

(Chicago Tribune.)

President Butler of Columbia, in his annual report, inveighs against the tendency to consider a college "an inviting and satisfactory form of country club," blaming this partly upon "shiftless and ambitious parents," but also upon college policy. For the latter we suspect the American passion for mere bigness and a perverted competition based upon it are largely responsible. What the university should strive for is quality, not quantity.

Dr. Hopkins, president of Dartmouth, believes that the world needs a new type of leader, and that it is one of the chief responsibilities of the university to find men fit to be leaders and prepare them for service.

Unquestionably leadership in many fields requires today a more complicated technical equipment and a wider command of facts than in the past. Where is this highly equipped leadership to come from? Much of it from the workshop of experience, of course. Rockefeller and Carnegie and Schwab were alumni of the college of experience, starting with exceptional natural gifts. Washington and Hamilton were not college men, nor Lincoln. Nevertheless, however, we may get our greatest leadership, it is plain that the mass of it would be the better for special preparation, and we agree with Dr. Hopkins that the preparation of leaders should be one of the chief responsibilities of our universities; in fact, we believe their main responsibility.

"Whether the colleges can produce leaders able to cope with the situation," says Dr. Hopkins justly, "is not proved, but higher education is the best hypothesis." And here the head of Dartmouth contributes a most valuable discussion of a principal problem of the college at the present. This is created by "a tremendously increased desire for higher education." At Dartmouth, he reports, there are nine men seeking education to one "we are able to teach with our facilities." This is the condition in different degrees of intensity which confronts all the great schools. Dartmouth, we believe, is solving it in the best way. It is trying by raising its requirements to weed out the men who are getting the least out of college in order to be free to give the best to those best fitted to make use of it. In other words, it is trying to select and prepare leaders.

Only upon a superficial view does this appear to be undemocratic. The democratic test should apply to the method of selection only. That is, men or women should be admitted regardless of wealth, social standing, or connections. They should be selected by test of fitness to profit by higher education, and this test should be uncompromising. The democracy of merit is the democracy to be applied, and for the purpose of giving what democracy must somehow contrive to find and perfect, a competent leadership.

He (passionately)—Don't you feel the call of the irresistible?
She—Sure, let's eat.

Maybelle (coquettishly)—You tickle me, Duke.

The Duke—My word, what a strange request.

contributions of Professors McCullum and Tait, to Bio-Chemistry and Physiology, respectively.

The importance of research work, he emphasized greatly, and pointed out that the responsibility did not end with the distribution of knowledge, but in the production of new knowledge. "Not only science demands that we should discover," he said, "but humanity as a whole demands it also."

Sir Charles referred to the academic ties between Canada and the Mother Country, and made mention of numerous McGill graduates who are distinguishing themselves and their Alma Mater in England. Particularly he spoke of Rutherford, Adams and Meekins. He touchingly referred to the death of Sir William Osler, McGill's foremost graduate and great benefactor, who was also a colleague of his.

Sir Charles, in concluding, expressed his great pleasure at the privilege of offering him to be present at this ceremony, and stated that nothing could have prevented him from fulfilling the invitation.

The Chairman then introduced Dr. Harvey Cushing, Professor of Surgery at Harvard, and one of the most brilliant brain surgeons in the medical world today. Dr. Cushing, who at present is engaged in the writing of the biography of the late Sir William Osler, entitled his address: "Laboratories Then and Laboratories Now." He built his theme around the life of the great pathologist, who, he pointed out, had been an inspiration to the whole profession.

He went back to the early days of the McGill Medical School, showing the active and valuable part played therein by Osler.

Dr. Cushing traced the growth of the modern laboratory movement, and spoke of the lack of teaching facilities here in 1874. Laboratories in those days were usually portable affairs, Osler himself being in charge of a rather inextensive laboratory in a cloak-room, where one microscope formed all the apparatus. But "the candle of knowledge can be lighted in more ways than one," said the speaker, and lack of conveniences and opportunities did not prevent the early idealists at McGill from building up a Medical Faculty second almost to none on the American continent.

Spacious and well-equipped quarters, however, like the new Biological Buildings, give greater opportunities to the greater number, and are always a good investment, to say the least. The efficient laboratory training, as given in pre-medical courses is of great importance to the student. "Knowledge a man can use is the only knowledge," quoted the speaker.

Dr. Cushing pointed out the dangers of too great development of laboratory work and consequent neglect of actual bedside work, and emphasized that big laboratory buildings bring added responsibility.

He concluded with the splendid sentiment that he hoped that Canada and the United States would maintain their intellectual communion for years to come. The spirit exemplified by Sir William Osler, who divided his life between Canada and the States in his services to Medical Science. He suggested that when the Pathological Building is erected it should be named very fittingly after the man who had done so much for McGill and medicine.

Following the ceremony in the R. V. C., the Biological Buildings were thrown open for inspection, and tea was served in the Botanical Laboratory.

Amongst the distinguished guests were the following:—

Dr. Lafayette Benedict Mender, professor of physiology at Yale; Dr. R. H. Chittenden, professor of physiological chemistry at Yale and director of the Sheffield Scientific School; Prof. M. O. Malts, Victoria Memorial Museum, Ottawa; Dr. Spencer Melvin, Kingston; Prof. J. J. R. MacLeod, professor of physiology at Toronto; Lieut.-Col. Thomas McCrae, F.R.C.P., professor of medicine at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia; Dr. Simon Flexner, director of laboratories of Rockefeller Institute, New York; Dr. W. J. Gies, professor of biochemistry at Columbia; Dr. Louis de Lotbiniere Harwood, dean of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Montreal; Dr. Alex. Primrose, dean of the Faculty of Medicine at Toronto; Prof. A. G. Huntsman, professor of biology at Toronto; Prof. McKibbin, Dalhousie University; Dr. S. Grondin, Laval University; Dr. P. Bazett, Philadelphia; Dr. H. T. Gussow, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa; Dr. Campbell Palmer Howard, a graduate of McGill, now professor of the theory and practice of medicine at the State University of Iowa; Dr. E. E. Prince, of the biological board of the Fisheries Branch, Ottawa; and Ald. H. B. Seybold, representing the Mayor of Montreal.

The barrister was wasting the time of the court, and, in the course of a long-winded speech, he dwelt at unnecessary length on the appearance of certain bags connected with the case.

"They might," he went on, pompously, "they might have been full bags, or they might have been half-filled bags, or they might even have been empty bags, or—"

"Or, perhaps," dryly interpolated the judge, "they might have been windbags."

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL EXECUTIVE MEETING

A meeting of the executive of the Psychological Society was held yesterday afternoon. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted. Plans were then discussed for the carrying on of activities of the Society throughout the session. It was decided that meetings should be held on the third Wednesday of each month, with the exception of October. This latter is to be a public meeting, and the date, speaker, and other definite information will be announced later. The Executive wish to announce that membership fees will now be received by the treasurer, Woodhouse, Arts '23.

The Psychological Society is by no means an old institution, being inaugurated only last term. It has for its Honorary President Dr. Tait, whose inaugurated only last season. It has for its Honorary President Dr. Tait, whose interest and work in the field of Psychology is well known.

RIFLE ASSOCIATION EXPECTS GOOD YEAR

The McGill Rifle Association expects to recommence activities this week-end. Membership is open to all students on payment of a small fee to cover current expenses. Rifles and ammunition are supplied free of charge by the militia authorities, and it is hoped a large number will take advantage of this opportunity of learning to shoot.

As the weather necessarily places a limit on the number of practices before the Intercollegiate shoot toward the end of October, all men intending to enter for this competition, as well as for the Dominion Shield, must be out this week-end.

The first general meeting of the Club will be held in Room B., Strathcona Hall at 1.30 p.m. Saturday, to enroll members and attend to any business on hand.

To the tune of the Doxology.
To be sung just before games.

There are two teams who play
McGill,
And they are Queen's and Varsity,

They always come to make kill

But we must win the victory.
M-c-G-I-L-L—Yell—

—A. V. Forrester, Med. '24.

Red and White, full of fight,
Play the game with all your might,

Rush that ball right down the field

(Rush that puck right down the ice)

Fight, fight, fight, old Red and White.

—A. V. Forrester, Med. '24.

PARODY

Tune of "Georgette", Latest Song Hit

O Queen's, O Queen's, you're as wild as can be,
But soon, so soon, you'll sleep peacefully,

When Old McGill gets thro' with you, Gee!
We'll haze you, we'll daze you; you'll think you've played with T.N.T.

O say! You play, but not as you should,

O me, O my, why can't you be good?

Once you were gentle and meek,
Now you're as wild as the Sheik,

We'll get you yet—you bet!

—M. H. Toker, Dent. '24.
